Ralph Fielding, viola

Ralph Fielding teaches viola at the Lynn University Conservatory of Music and in the summer at the Montecito International Music Festival (Thousand Oaks, CA). He previously taught at the University of Southern California, the University of California Los Angeles and Texas Tech University. He is active as a clinician at music programs around the country and has given master classes at such institutions as Oberlin College, the Cleveland Institute, DePaul University, Indiana University, the New England Conservatory, the San Francisco Conservatory, Rice University, the New World Symphony, the Eastman School of Music and the Colburn School. He has also been an adjudicator for ASTA, MTNA, Suzuki, AVS/Primrose and other competitions. He specializes in quickly getting players to reach their highest potential through combining a singing approach to music-making with simple ways to master the basic mechanics of bow control, shifts, string crossings and bow changes.
Prior to his teaching activities, Fielding had a long history as an orchestral musician. As a teenager, he played a year in the Utah Symphony under Maurice Abravanel. He later spent 16 years as a member of the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra (including serving a term as Chair of their Auditions Committee) and has since helped students prepare musically and mentally for the most competitive of performance situations. His orchestral repertoire students continue to win positions in ICSOM and regional orchestras.

In addition to his classical work, Mr. Fielding has played in the string section for dozens of Hollywood film scores (such as Ghost, Armageddon, Contact, My Best Friend’s Wedding, The Parent Trap), sound recordings (for such diverse artists as The Counting Crows, the Wallflowers, Alanis Morissette, Wayne Shorter and Willie Nelson), and TV shows (including Futurama, Jag, and Star Trek DS9, TNG & Voyager) and was in the pit orchestra for Johnny Carson’s last appearance as host of the Tonight Show.

Ralph Fielding held a three-year term as the elected President of the American Viola Society, a 1,000-member nonprofit organization, founded in 1971, that puts out a peer-reviewed Journal two or three times a year, sponsors the North American Viola Congress every two years and holds the Primrose Memorial Viola Competition, one of the nation’s largest and most prestigious viola-only events.

Program Notes

Märchen von der schönen Melusine, Op. 32 (2nd version)
By Felix Mendelssohn

Taken from notes by Christopher Hogwood

At a general meeting of the Philharmonic Society in London on November 5, 1832, the members of the Society unanimously agreed to request Mendelssohn to compose a symphony, an overture, and a vocal work, for which he was to be offered the sum of one hundred guineas. The society would retain exclusive rights for two years. Mendelssohn agreed to these terms on November 28, 1832. When he arrived in England the following year, he brought not only the Italian Symphony and the aria “Infelice”, but also two overtures: the Trumpet Overture and the Melusine Overture. The Trumpet Overture was given in the 1833 season. The Melusine Overture was presented as a sign of Mendelssohn’s gratitude for the pleasure, and Melusine was performed in the following year.
The genesis of the Märchen von der schönen Melusine, its rehearsal and performance in London and Mendelssohn’s subsequent rewriting can be traced through correspondence with his sister, Fanny, and letters between the composer and his friends. Not everyone understood the significance of the title. Fanny, for example wrote, “By the way, I’m not at all familiar with the story. What sort of sea lion rumbles along so wickedly in F minor and afterwards is always calmed down by the friendly play of the waves?...I would like some information about the Overture...” Her brother wrote back, “I wrote this overture to an opera by Conradin Kreutzer which I heard in the Königstädtter Theatre [in Berlin] last year at this time. The overture (that is, the one by Kreutzer) which was encored displeased me marvelously, as did the whole opera...I wanted to create an overture which people will not encore but which would be more inwardly felt. So I took what pleased me in the subject and, in short, the overture came into the world.”

The first public performance of the overture was given on April 7, 1834. The reception, although warm in the press, was unexpectedly cool in the concert-hall. Mendelssohn claimed to be untouched by the public lack of enthusiasm; he wrote to Charlotte Mascheles, “And, so the people at the Philharmonic did not like ‘Melusine’? Never mind, that won’t kill me. I felt sorry when you told me, and at once played the Overture through, to see if I too should dislike it; but it pleased me, and so there is no great harm done...” Later, his chronic Revisionskrankheit (“Revising Sickness” in Mendelssohn’s own word) returned, and he announced that he had taken note of Fanny’s criticism of Melusine: “I will change and remove...the passage in A-flat that she pointed out, as well as numerous other important ones.” In November, 1835, it had been recast and revised (2nd version), and presented to Breitkoh & Härtel for publication as opus 32.

Concerto for Flute and Orchestra (2013)
By Behzad Ranjbaran

Notes by Luke Howard

A Blend of Styles Ranjbaran studied only the Western art-music tradition at the Tehran Music Conservatory, but privately pursued his interest in Persian classical and folk music as well. By allowing those two streams to combine in his own works, he celebrates the transcendent commonalities between cultures.
The Persian roots in Ranjbaran’s music emerge both in its structure and subject matter. His Persian Trilogy for orchestra and the Songs of Eternity (setting poems from the Rubáiyát of Omar Khayyám) composed for Renée Fleming do so explicitly in their titles and text sources. But his Violin Concerto written for Joshua Bell, the Piano Concerto, and the Enchanted Garden for piano quintet, among many other works, are also redolent with the flavors of Persian inspirations.

Ranjbaran’s new Flute Concerto continues this pursuit of blended cultural influences in music. It also further Peter Schaaf manifests his commitment to concerto and concertante works, which outnumber the purely orchestral works in his catalog. Commissioned by The Philadelphia Orchestra and written for its principal flutist, Jeffrey Khaner, this Concerto was inspired by the delicate, evocative sound of the ney, a bamboo flute that has been at the heart of Middle Eastern music for close to 5,000 years. Long regarded as a mystic instrument in Persian literature, the ney possesses a haunting and alluring tone that is said to emulate the human voice, and so is capable of expressing the deepest of human emotions. Throughout the Concerto, Ranjbaran utilizes the modern flute’s ability to play bright, agile passagework and also the embellished plaintive melodies that are idiomatic to the ney.

Following the classical three-movement design, the Concerto opens with a first movement that juxtaposes two contrasting musical personalities. The first subject (Grave lamentoso), heard at the outset, is the mournful song of a solo flute cadenza, with chromatic inflections that readily evoke an exotic lament. (With a focus on melodic intervals of perfect fifths and augmented seconds, this cadenza presents the basic intervallic motifs of the entire work.) The cadenza then transitions into a faster Allegro con spirito section for the whole orchestra, as lively leaping figures are tossed from one group to another with carefree vigor, expressing (in the composer’s words) “the joy of living.”

There are quieter passages throughout in which the restrained orchestral accompaniment emphasizes the soloist’s line, along with moments of mystery, comedy, and the grotesque. A tutti orchestral climax gives way to a reprise of the lamentoso solo flute, and the spirited music also returns later. But it is finally the fervor of the lament that carries the movement to its conclusion.

The second movement (Adagio cantabile), a lyrical slow one, employs the same characteristic intervals—the perfect fifth and augmented second—as the first. Yet its character is tender and dream-like as shimmering orchestral colors uphold the lithe flute line. An agitated middle section recalls ideas from the first movement before a return to the cantabile melody of the opening. Here the orchestral accompaniment becomes increasingly sparse and ethereal until the flute and harp alone play a wistful duet at the close.

The composer describes the final movement (Presto giocoso) as “one continuous quasi-scherzo” in which materials from the previous movements are recalled and reinterpreted with a joyful character. From the outset, the orchestra is mercurial and puckish, while the solo flute’s moto perpetuo stream of 16th-notes cascades in a whirlwind that challenges the instrument’s limits of agility. Glissandos and pizzicatos in the orchestral strings boost the carnival-ride abandon of the movement. After some relatively serious moments in the middle section, a recapitulation of the opening material returns the movement’s character to one of carefree exuberance, with the music at its brightest and most festive in the coda.

Harold en Italie
By Hector Berlioz

Notes by Paul Banks and Hugh Macdonald

In his Memoirs, Berlioz wrote in some detail about the origins of Harold en Italie. It was composed in response to a request from the great violinist, Paganini. Berlioz stated, “A few weeks after the concert which had re-established me, Paganini came to see me. He told me he had a Stradivarius viola, a marvelous instrument, which he wanted to play in public; but he lacked the right music…So to please the great man, I attempted to write a solo for the viola, but a solo combined with orchestral accompaniment in such a way as to leave the orchestra full freedom of action; for I was confident that by the incomparable power of his playing Paganini would be able to maintain the supremacy of the soloist.”

The Memoris’ account of the work’s genesis continues: “My idea was to write a series of orchestral scenes in which the solo viola would be involved, to a greater or lesser extent, like an actual person, retaining the same character throughout. I decided to give it as a setting the poetic impressions recollected from my wanderings in the Abruzzi, and to make it a kind of melancholy dreamer in the style of Byron’s Childe Harold. Hence the title of the symphony, Harold en Italie.”

As in the Symphonie fantastique (Berlioz’s another famous work), a motto (the viola’s first theme) recurs throughout the work, but with the difference that whereas the theme of the Symphonie fantastique, the idée fixe, keeps obtruding like an obsessive idea on scenes that are alien to it and deflects the current of the music, the Harold theme is superimposed on the other orchestral voices so as to contrast with them in character and tempo without interrupting their development.

Two passages in Harold en Italie were derived from the Intrata di Rob Roy MacGregor, an overture which Berlioz composed in Italy in 1831. The first of these passages, which appears in each movement as a motto theme designating, Harold himself, is first heard at bar 38 of the first movement. The second is heard at bar 166 of the first movement.

Although it was composed for Paganini, he told Berlioz that he would not be playing it. Berlioz wrote to Ferrand: “I think Paganini will find that the viola part is not written sufficiently like a concerto; it is a symphony of a novel kind, not a composition written for the purpose of showing off an individual talent such as his.” Without Paganini’s participation, Berlioz nonetheless planned the first performance of Harold en Italie. It was first heard in the Salle du Conservatoire on November 23, 1834. The conductor was Narcisse Girard and the viola soloist Chrétien Urhan, the principal violinist in the Opéra orchestra and a devoted exponent of both the viola and the viola d’amore. Berlioz was pleased with the success of the work. Harold en Italie became one of the pieces Berlioz drew on most consistently throughout his concert career, and the second movement, the Marche de pélerins, achieved considerable popularity on its own.
