Bailey-Michelle Collins

Bailey-Michelle Collins began her piano studies at the age of five in Gainesville, Florida. She has since participated in a number of events nationwide, where she has had the privilege to work with renowned instructors such as Natalya Antonova, Robert Roux, Fabio Bidini, and Julian Martin. As a developing soloist, Bailey received scholarship awards from organizations including the Boston University Tanglewood Institute and the Florida Federation of Music Clubs. At age sixteen, she made her orchestral debut under Robert Gary Langford as winner of the David Hubbell Concerto Competition.

Program Notes

Violin Concerto
By Alban Berg

Notes by Tsukasa Cherkaoui

Who Is Alban Berg?
Born: February 9, 1885 in Vienna, Austria
Died: December 24, 1935 in Vienna, Austria

Austrian composer Alban Berg is known as the composer of the Second Viennese School. (The Second Viennese School refers to a group of the composers, Schoenberg and Webern, whose compositions are characterized by atonality and twelve-tone compositions.) Berg’s music education started at his young age when his governess taught him the piano. Berg was interested in composition, and he wrote a number of piano duets and songs before he started formal training.

Berg studied composition with Schoenberg from 1904 to 1911. Schoenberg observed, “Alban Berg is an extraordinarily gifted composer, but the state he was in when he came to me was such that his imagination apparently could not work on anything but lieder... He was absolutely incapable of writing an instrumental movement or inventing an instrumental theme.” Although Berg developed a deeper relationship with Schoenberg, who became a father figure, he needed artistic independence. His earlier works showed the impact of Schoenberg’s teaching. However, his later works, written without Schoenberg’s guidance, revealed his talent. Wozzeck is considered one of his great achievements.
Interesting Facts about the Violin Concerto

• The violin concerto was commissioned by the American violinist, Louis Krasner in 1935. When Berg was asked to write a violin concerto, he was working on Lulu, and he was reluctant to stop working on the opera. But, he accepted the commission because he needed money.

• After Berg received sad news about the death of Manon Gropius, the daughter of Alma Mahler and Walter Gropius, he decided to dedicate the concerto to the memory of her.

• Shortly after Berg finished the concerto, he got an insect sting that gradually developed into an abscess. He died of blood infection at the hospital before he could hear the first performance. The violin concerto became his last work.

• The concerto premiered on April 19, 1936 in Barcelona and was performed by Louis Krasner and conducted by Hermann Scherchen.

• The edition, from which Philharmonia is performing tonight, is the critical edition by Douglas Jarman, a leading scholar of Berg. It is based on a thorough study of the manuscript sources. Four sources exist: the full score, located in the Library of Congress; the short score; a continuity draft; and a collection of sketches, which are housed in the National Library of Austria.

Viola Concerto
By Béla Bartók

Notes by Tsukasa Cherkaoui

Who Is Béla Bartók?
Born: March 25, 1881, in Hagyszentmiklós, Hungary (now Sînnicolau Mare, Romania)
Died: September 26, 1945, in New York, NY

Béla Bartók is commonly known as a composer today. However, he was a devoted ethnomusicologist who collected and analyzed folk music. As early as 1906, Bartók started collecting Slovak folk music, followed by Romanian, Serbian and Bulgarian tunes. His collecting trip even extended to Transylvania. As the collection methods, Bartók transcribed the tunes from the performances and used a gramophone to record them. The manuscripts of the transcriptions and phonograph cylinders are available from Bartók Archives at Hungarian Academy of Sciences.

His intensive research on folk music is reflected in his compositions, such as Fourteen Bagatelles, op. 6 and Romanian Folk Dances. Bartók grew distressed when he witnessed nationalistic intolerance and Germany’s annexation of Austria in 1930s. He looked for a safe place for his valuable manuscripts, sending them first to Switzerland, then to New York, which established The New York Bartók. Archives. Currently, Bartók’s manuscripts are managed by his son, Péter Bartók in Homosassa, Florida. After his mother’s death, Bartók felt no obligation to remain in Hungary and, began to consider emigrating. When he discovered a large collection of Serbo-Croat recordings undertaken by a Harvard professor, Milman Parry, he became determined to move to the United States, where he lived for the remainder of his life.
Interesting Facts about the Viola Concerto

• The viola concerto was commissioned by William Primrose, a Scottish violist. When he commissioned the work, everyone thought he made a mistake as Bartók was known to the public as, “a dismal universal hiss, the sound of public scorn.” However, Primrose was assured his commission when he heard the Menuhin’s recording of Bartók’s second violin concerto.

• Bartók began to work on the concerto between July and August of 1945. He wrote to Primrose, “I am very glad to be able to tell you that your Viola Concerto is ready in draft, so that only the score has to be written, which means a purely mechanical work, so to speak…I can be through in 5 or 6 weeks.” However, Bartók died in September 1945 before the composition was completed.

• The version that Philharmonia is performing tonight is prepared by Tibor Serly and is based on Bartók’s sketch. Reconstructing and orchestrating the concerto by Serly was a natural decision because he had collaborated with Bartók earlier on Mikrokosmos Suite. He originally prepared both the viola and cello versions, based on Bartók’s comment to Primrose that “Most probably some passages will prove to be uncomfortable or unplayable.” When Gregor Piatigorski, a renowned cellist, found out about the cello version, he offered a larger sum for the first rights to perform than Primrose had. In the end, the Bartók Estate honored the original agreement.

• The concerto premiered on December 2, 1949, performed by William Primrose, conducted by Antal Doráti, and performed by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra.

Concerto for Flute and String Orchestra
By André Jolivet

Notes by Tsukasa Cherkaoui

Who Is André Jolivet?
Born: August 8, 1905 in Paris, France
Died: December 20, 1974 in Paris, France

André Jolivet was born into an artistic family: his father was a painter and his mother a pianist. Despite Jolivet’s musical talent at an early age, his parents encouraged him to be a teacher and dissuaded him from pursuing music professionally. However, his concert experience at the Pasdeloup concerts in 1919 led to his discovery of the music of Debussy, Dukas and Ravel, and gave him a lasting impression that encouraged him to study composition.

He began to study composition with Paul Le Flem and Edgar Varése, who trained Jolivet in different ways: Felm taught counterpoint, harmony and classical forms while Varése introduced him to atonal methods. Varése, especially, helped him “to discover…music as a magical and ritual expression of human society.” This ideology led him to join Le jeune France, a group formed by French composers in 1936 to promote spiritual values and human qualities in a mechanical and impersonal world. Around World War II, Jolivet’s composition style became simple and melodious. He wrote music for “evasion and relaxation.” He actively composed music until his death in 1974. In an interview with Martin Cadieu, Jolivet said, “Music, in my opinion, must be spiritual, being a religious art, if it is to play a role of first importance in the life of human society.”
Interesting Facts About the Concerto

- The concerto was composed in 1949 while Jolivet served as the director of the Comédie Française. This capacity gave him opportunities to travel to Egypt, the Middle East, and the Far East. Jolivet’s music, composed around this period, incorporated the characters of those regions. You will hear flutter-tonging (“FrrrrFrrrr”) played by the flute, whose effect may be representing musical elements from an exotic culture.
- Jolivet contended that a concerto should portray a dialogue between a soloist and orchestra, and not portray the soloist as “a virtuoso chatterbox.” Watch for musical dialogues in this concerto!
- The work was not only dedicated to Jean-Pierre Rampal, but it was also premiered by him in February 1950, with the composer conducting.

Concerto in F for Piano and Orchestra
By George Gershwin

Notes by Tsukasa Cherkaoui

Who Is George Gershwin?
Born: September 26, 1898, in Brooklyn, NY
Died: July 11, 1937, in Hollywood, CA

America’s most famous composer, George Gershwin began his career as a song plugger (a salesman who promoted songs by playing and singing them for performers) when Jerome H. Remick & Co., a Tin Pan Alley music publishing firm, hired him in 1913. Endless hours at the keyboard made him a skilled vocal accompanist. Also, he took an interest in composing his own songs. In the 1920s, his songwriting career took off. Swanee, recorded by the popular singer Al Jolson, became his first hit song. As his first Broadway musical, Gershwin composed the music for Lady, Be Good!, with his brother Ira contributing lyrics. The musical introduced “Fascinating Rhythm” and “Oh, Lady, Be Good!”, which became standard American songs.

His songwriting career took an unexpected turn when Gershwin appeared on a vocal recital in 1923 by Eva Gauthier, a Canadian mezzo-soprano. The program included classical songs by Purcell, Schoenberg, and Bartok. Furthermore, Gauthier sang Broadway and Tin Pan Alley songs, written by Kern, Berlin, and Gershwin. Gershwin himself accompanied the American songs, adding the “jazz” flair to the recital. This recital gave audiences and critics a chance to reflect on Gershwin’s insight into music, which was shaped by personal intuition, rather than conservatory training, in the context of high art.

The complete bulletin can be viewed online at the New York Philharmonic Leon Levy Digital Archives.
In 1924, his musical career took the next step, of which Irvin Berlin said, “the only songwriter I know who became a composer” when Gershwin wrote Rhapsody in Blue for piano and orchestra. The premiere was conducted by Paul Whiteman and his orchestra as part of a program billed as “An Experiment in Modern Music.” The program’s goal was to demonstrate lively dance music called jazz, and it was avoided by concert musicians and critics and regarded as superficial at that time thought it could be elevated to “art music.” Gershwin’s achievement from Rhapsody, a unification of “jazz” and classical music, contributed in shaping American classical music.

Interesting Facts About the Concerto

- After Walter Damrosch heard Rhapsody in Blue, he approached Gershwin to write a concerto for the New York Symphony Society.
- When Gershwin accepted the commission, he had to find out what a concerto was. In order to learn how to write for the instruments of the orchestra, he bought Forsyth’s Orchestration, a standard orchestration textbook students of the days. The original working title of this concerto was New York Concerto.
- After Gershwin completed Concerto in F, he hired an orchestra at his own expense for a run-through of the work. Bill Daly, who conducted the orchestra, and Walter Damrosch suggested some revisions. Gershwin made a number of extensive cuts, eliminating superfluous material.
- The concerto premiered on December 3, 1925, performed by George Gershwin as the soloist and conducted by Walter Damrosch with the New York Symphony Orchestra (which later merged with the Philharmonic Society of New York to form the New York Philharmonic in 1928).
- Olin Downes of The New York Times described the afternoon of the premiere: “At the end of the performance popularity of the composer was attested in long and vehement applause, so that Mr. Gershwin was kept bowing for some minutes from the stage.”
Community Support

The Friends of the Conservatory of Music is a volunteer organization formed to promote high quality performance education for exceptionally talented young musicians.

For some students, meeting the costs associated with a world-class conservatory education can be highly challenging. This dedicated group provides financial support for many annual and endowed scholarships. Since its establishment in 2003, the Friends have raised significant funds through annual gifts and special events. The Gingerbread Holiday Concert is chief among them.

Spotlight No. 2: Music of Yevgeni Sharlat
Sunday, Jan. 20 – 4 p.m.

“That’s often the definition of greatness in music – when something as abstract as pure tone starts to tap you on the shoulder with a message to look outside of music, and this [Sharlat’s Piano Quartet] does that emphatically… it might be one of the most compelling works to enter the chamber music literature in some time. His aesthetic is unique, and yet it evolves even during the course of the work.” - Philadelphia Inquirer

Join us for a rich program of works for duo piano, string quartet, woodwind quintet and more by award winning composer Yevgeni Sharlat. Program will include the world premiere of the 2019 Lynn University Conservatory of Music commissioned work for piano trio.
