Biography

Sachiko Okada, double bass

Sachiko Okada began her musical career playing the piano and the cello at age 6. Her interest and study in double bass began in middle school in her hometown of Aichi, Japan. Her teachers included Yasunori Kawahara, principal bass of the Coln Radio Symphony Orchestra; Hiroshi Ikematsu, principal bass of the NHK Symphony Orchestra; Yoshio Nagashima, professor of Tokyo University of Music; Fumie Kobayashi, principal of the Kobe Chamber Orchestra. She studied with Nobuyuki Tanaka, from the Nagoy Philharmonic Orchestra, at the Nagoya College of Music where she earned her Bachelor's degree.

Sachiko has performed as a recitalist in chamber music and as an orchestral musician throughout Japan. In 2001, she came to the United States and is currently enrolled in the Professional Studies Diploma program at the Lynn University Conservatory of Music where she studies double bass with Shigeru Ishikawa, principal bass of the former Florida Philharmonic Orchestra.
