Bud Holmes' most celebrated solo tuba performances have taken place in Central Park under the cherry blossoms for enchanted audiences of neighborhood kids responding with hugs, attempts to climb into the tuba bell, or requests for an encore like "row, row, row your boat" or "Star Wars." In the concert halls, he has performed the Gregson Tuba Concerto with the South Carolina Youth Philharmonic and the Broughton Concerto in the final round recital of Eastern

Music Festival's Concerto Competition. He is a finalist for fellowship with the New World Symphony and plays concerts with both its brass ensemble and orchestra under the baton of Michael Tilson Thomas. While on tour with the American Wind Symphony Orchestra conducted by Robert Boudrou, Bud performed at many of America's waterfront parks on the AWSO's vessel Point Counterpoint II. They were featured artists at New Haven's International Festival of Arts and Ideas in 2007. He can be heard on the AWSO's latest CDs, Music of the Americas and Reflections. While attending the College-Conservatory of Music in Cincinnati, he performed with the Philharmonia Orchestra. Also, he studied chamber music in the Honors Brass Quintet and the Wind Symphony. He has attended the Mendez Brass Institute twice where he was fortunate to receive lessons and coaching from Dan Perantoni and Sam Pilafian. His main private teachers have been Kenneth Amis and Timothy Northcut. Bud's hope to make music a creative expression of life's mysteries and discoveries has lead to journeys outside the practice room that have included taking trips to India, Africa, and Europe, living and working in New York City, and spending a year looking within while living in a Zen Monastery. Next year Bud will attend Carnegie Mellon University where he has received a full fellowship.
