FROM THE EDITOR

Annual gifts are what keep the Lynn University boat afloat from day to day. Without this support from our friends, Lynn could not provide its students with such daily and immediate needs as air conditioning, clean and technically-advanced classrooms and electricity, as well as student scholarships and library books. And that’s why, in this, our annual giving issue, we are expressing our gratitude to those donors who provide the university with yearly donations. No matter how small, these gifts accumulate and help to keep the Lynn campus the well-sun, happy, beautiful place it is. As Lennon and McCartney wrote, we get by “with a little help from our friends.”

Why they GIVE each year

LOURDES NARVAEZ SOTO '92
"Each time I think of my years at Lynn, my heart smiles. I had wonderful years, great memories and friendships that last forever. I believe that all alumni should make a donation. It's a way to give thanks and make sure that our alma mater will continue educating professionals for years to come."

PAT THOMAS
"As a 48-year resident of Boca Raton, I have seen the university grow from a small, all-girls, two-year college to an internationally-recognized university because of the faculty and leadership. We must continue to give back to our community in order to provide for future generations. I am happy to serve as president of the Friends of the Conservatory board."

AUTUMN AND MONTY REDWINE
"As parents, we recognize how good Lynn has been to our daughter — from leadership opportunities and encouragement of academic excellence, to the nurturing coach and advisor who both saw her talent and encouraged her. Private schools are not blessed with state-provided funds, so we know our financial support is appreciated and used wisely."

TIMEA VARGA '10
"Contributing to the 2010 Class Gift is a way for me to demonstrate how thankful I am for everything Lynn University has done for me. This gift clearly is a symbol not only of my and my peers' unforgettable journey here, but also of our common path of giving back as alumni of the Class of 2010."

JUAN CAMILO TAMAYA '05
"Here at Lynn we are a family. Growing up in Colombia, I was taught by my parents to always give a little back to the family when I would work. I grew up with this principle and the principle that I should never go anywhere or visit my family when I would work. I grew up with this principle and the principle that the more you give, the more you get. Now Lynn is my family and I always give a little bit back."

ANIBAL MANZANO '08, '10
"I've made a donation for the past three years because at Lynn I learned the importance of giving back to the community. The university clearly transmits this message to students and I believe it is crucial for future Knights' success, and for the university as a whole, to keep spreading the word."

"During the trustee's job, a challenge is to inspire every new Lynn student to give."

BANK OF AMERICA
"We watched our neighbor, Lynn University, the extreme challenge of losing four faculty members in the earthquake in Haiti. We are so impressed with the strong sense of community and how the university responded as the earthquake unfolded. The Bank of America Foundation is honored and privileged to make a gift to the Lynn University Global Citizens Fund in honor of the generous spirit of philanthropy while on a humanitarian journey. What you do here at Lynn is important, it is to give back is right in line with the mission of the Bank of America Foundation."

During the 2009-10 fiscal year, the Leadership Society, he would present a donation. It’s a way to give thanks to our alma mater. For every new alumni donor to our community in order to educate professionals for every new alumni donor to meet his challenge.

BANK OF AMERICA

"We watched our neighbor, Lynn University, deal with the extreme challenge of losing four students and two faculty members in the earthquake in Haiti. We were so impressed with the strong sense of family and caring, and how the university responded as the tragic events unfolded. The Bank of America Foundation is honored and privileged to make a gift of $20,000 to the Lynn University Global Citizenship Memorial Fund in honor of the generous spirits of those who perished while on a humanitarian January-term trip. What you do here at Lynn in teaching students how important it is to give back is right in line with the mission of the Bank of America Foundation. We are pleased that the university is committed to continuing to provide these learning experiences to develop citizenship in its students," said Fabiola Brumley, Bank of America’s Palm Beach County market president.

Supporters STRIKE A MATCH

SHIRLEY RILEY, grandmother of Redwine's captain Lacy Redwine '11, has been donating since Redwine stepped foot on Lynn's campus three years ago. Not only has Riley been a generous donor, her employer, Oracle, has been matching the gift every year. "Oracle encourages employees to give to charitable organizations of their choice. Our company not only encourages giving, but makes it easy for the recipients of our gifts to receive matching funds," she says. "Having a private education myself, I am committed to the influence and benefits that are available through our private colleges and universities. It's satisfying to know that my support is appreciated and will be used to help others benefit from an educational experience similar to mine."

PEGGY STEIN is a member of the Friends of the Conservatory board. "I believe it is important for students' success, and I enjoy being a part of the process, to keep it interesting. I think I would never go anywhere or visit anyone, you know, nothing, and I wanted to bring a gift. My family and I believe that the more you give, the more you get. Now Lynn is my family and I want to give a little bit back."
