The Lynn University Philharmonia sets the standard for university level symphonic training. The Lynn University Philharmonia is directed by Albert-George Schram, former resident conductor of the Florida Philharmonic and resident conductor of the Columbus Symphony Orchestra. The Philharmonia was first formed as the Harid String Orchestra with the founding of the Conservatory in 1991. Their first public performance was conducted by Dr. Claudio Jaffé as guest conductor of the Harid String Orchestra that season. It became a full symphony orchestra in 1993. As an integral part of the training of both graduate and undergraduate music students of Lynn University, the Philharmonia offers excellent orchestral training through the preparation and performance of orchestral repertoire and a minimum of 6 public performances per year. It has presented several new works throughout its history and has always been enthusiastically received by the public and the press.

Music directors of the Philharmonia have included such conductors as Markand Thakar and Arthur Weisberg, and many guest conductors such as David Lockington, Zeev Dorman, Joseph Silverstein, Claudio Jaffé, Sergiu Schwartz, and others. It has performed in such venues as the Lincoln Theater in Miami Beach, the Coral Springs City Center, the Spanish River Church in Boca Raton, and the Broward Center for the Performing Arts. Now in its 11th season as a full symphony orchestra, the Lynn University Philharmonia Orchestra continues to present high quality concerts with a wide range of repertoire.
A native of the Netherlands, Dr. Schram is resident staff conductor of the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, a principal guest conductor of the Charlotte Symphony Orchestra, and resident conductor of the Lynn University Conservatory of Music Philharmonia Orchestra. He has been resident conductor of the Florida Philharmonic. His longest tenure has been with the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, where he has worked in a variety of capacities since 1979.

Concurrently, Dr. Schram was music director and conductor of the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra from 1994-2000. During his tenure, the orchestra blossomed into the premier arts organization in West Texas. From 1990 to 1996, Dr. Schram served as resident conductor of the Louisville Symphony Orchestra. Three of the orchestra’s subscription series have enjoyed exceptional growth under his artistic guidance.

Dr. Schram’s recent foreign conducting engagements have included the KBS Symphony Orchestra (live, televised concerts), the Taegu Symphony Orchestra in Korea, and the Orchester der Allgemeinen Musikgesellschaft Luzern in Switzerland. He has made return appearances to his native Holland to conduct the Netherland Radio Orchestra and the Netherland Broadcast Orchestra.

In the United States, his recent and upcoming guest conducting appearances include the Florida Philharmonic, Dallas Symphony Orchestra, Tucson Symphony, Oklahoma City Philharmonic, Spokane Symphony, Louisville Orchestra, Dayton Philharmonic, Charlotte Symphony, Nashville Symphony, Shreveport Symphony, San Antonio Symphony, Ballet Metropolitan, and the Akron University Opera.

Dr. Schram’s studies have been largely in the European tradition under the tutelage of Franco Ferrara, Rafael Kubelik, Abraham Kaplan, and Neeme Järvi. He has studied at the Conservatory of the Hague in the Netherlands, the universities of Calgary and Victoria, and the University of Washington where he received the Doctor of Musical Arts in conducting.
By 1902, forty-one year old Gustav Mahler (1860-1911) had reached the pinnacle of his achievement as composer and conductor, and in that year his personal life took a brighter turn with his courtship and marriage to Alma Schindler. As he began work on his Symphony No. 5 in c sharp minor, Mahler was ready for a new direction, and the composer himself acknowledged that this was a work unlike any of his previous efforts.

A number of theories have been suggested as to Mahler’s sources of inspiration for the Fifth; the most frequently cited of these casts the symphony as a triumph of life over death. Mahler firmly resisted such programmatic labeling of this work, though the evolution of the work from the darkly-hued funeral march in c-sharp minor to the exuberant D Major Finale tends to lead the listener toward this conclusion. Mahler himself experienced a brush with death early in 1902 when he suffered a severe hemorrhage – his recovery and subsequent wedding seem to bolster the notion of a celebration of life over death.

Elements of Mahler’s Austrian upbringing assert themselves throughout the work, most notably the percussive, regimental trumpet call of the opening, and the third movement’s dialectic pairing of the chic Viennese waltz with the rustic ländler of the countryside. Mahler once claimed that he composed the haunting Adagietto as a musical love letter to his future bride, but the movement’s relationship to his earlier despondent song “Ich bin der Welt abhanden gekommen” (I am lost to the World) make this doubtful.

The Fifth Symphony is Mahler’s first ‘organic’ large scale work – here is the composer giving full vent to his imagination in invention and orchestration without a direct connection to a literary or religious source. His first four symphonies were based to varying degrees upon the collected poems known as Des Knaben Wunderhorn (The Youth’s Magic Horn), and in symphonies nos. 2, 3 and 4 he used voices to heighten the evocative power of the text. With the Fifth, Mahler lets the orchestral forces do the talking, though even here he is unable to resist a brief self-quotation of a Wunderhorn setting in the opening theme of the fifth movement.

Formally, the Symphony is a bit puzzling. Mahler’s tendency toward additive construction, where one musical idea begets the next, makes a concise schematic description difficult. Broadly speaking, the Symphony is arranged in three large segments; Part One comprising movements 1 and 2, Part Two movement 3 and Part Three movements 4 and 5, creating a symmetrical plan of a central scherzo.
movement flanked by two slow-fast pairs. Theorists have long debated the formal outline of each movement, with divergent results (for example, the fifth movement Rondo is not really a rondo in the traditional sense, since the opening theme is scarcely repeated).

Perhaps the most unusual formal feature of the Symphony is the length and weight of the central Scherzo movement, which combines lighthearted folk-based idioms with passionate, cadenza like trio sections to shift focus from minor to major. Use of a solo obligato horn as the movement’s protagonist is also unique to Mahler’s output. Also notable is the paring of the fourth and fifth movements, where the elegiac opening motive of the Adagietto is comically transformed in the fifth in a boisterous fugal treatment. Whatever Mahler’s formal scheme may have been, listeners are drawn to the work for its rich ensemble textures and the virtuoso writing for every section of the orchestra. Although the Fifth Symphony is today one of Mahler’s most popular works, it enjoyed only moderate success following its premiere (Arnold Schöenberg later recounted that he intervened when Mahler’s publisher was planning to melt down the plates used to engrave the work, as it had become obsolete by 1913). Mahler made numerous revisions to the Symphony; in fact, his final revisions to the work were among his last compositional efforts before his death in 1911. Regretfully, the final autograph disappeared, and only in 1964 was a definitive score issued which incorporated Mahler’s last revisions. Earlier versions of the work are, however, in circulation.

Even if Mahler felt that the Symphony was in need of adjustments, critics and historians have generally concluded that this work marked a breakthrough for the composer, his most confident and musically self-assured work to that time. Mahler biographer Henry-Louis de La Grange summed up the work and Mahler’s general compositional outlook nicely when he wrote that Mahler “[assumes] the uncertainty, the doubts, the secret anguish, the fundamental ambiguity that marked his time and still weighs so heavily in ours.” Certainly, we are treated to a remarkable journey through the peaks and valleys of emotional discovery with this work, in a way that only music, as created by one of the twentieth century’s greatest symphonists, can take us.

Lynn University
Lynn University, a private, coeducational institution founded in 1962, has grown from modest beginnings to more than 2,000 students from 46 states and 93 nations. The university's mission is to provide the education, support, and environment to enable individual students to realize their fullest potential and prepare for a future of success.

The conservatory's mission
The mission of the conservatory is to provide performance education for gifted young musicians, setting a superior standard for education as it cultivates the musicianship, artistry, and skills needed to succeed in music performance.

Students at the conservatory
Conservatory students have come to Lynn University from 13 countries and 19 states, with 14 conservatory students from here in Florida. When they graduate, these young musicians will perform with some of the most prestigious symphonies in the world—Calgary, Detroit, Montreal, Milwaukee, Washington D.C., the New World Symphony, and the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra. Conservatory students have competed in the Juilliard Concerto Competition, National Trumpet Competition, Rubinstein International Piano Competition, and the Wallenstein Violin Competition. Graduates study at Juilliard, New England Conservatory, Yale, and other prestigious schools. The exceptional quality of the conservatory is evidenced by 98% of the graduates remaining active in music.

The future
Today Lynn University seeks to promote the conservatory and continue its traditions of excellence. The future of the conservatory rests in the hands of patrons who, through the Adopt-A-Student Program, sponsor the educational expenses of students through four years at Lynn University and assist as the university seeks to expand its endowment for scholarships to ensure the arts continue to thrive at Lynn University and in South Florida.
